

Abstract

The invention relates to a rescue system for rescuing persons who are in danger in high places, composed of a belt system and a rescue parachute system connected thereto, the release mechanism for the rescue parachute being exposed automatically when the belt system is put on so that it is ensured that the rescue parachute is opened when the wearer jumps or falls from a height.